Editorial

Il est des coïncidences heureuses qui, en outre, par la convergence de leurs propos, soient annonciatrices de nouvelles perceptions et de nouvelles orientations. Ce mois de rentrée de septembre 2006 aura été particulièrement riche à cet égard. On peut citer, parmi les événements récents les plus retentissants, la Conférence des ministres de l'éducation et lancement à Maputo de la deuxième décennie de l'éducation de l'Union Africaine, la Conférence internationale sur la diversité culturelle et la cohésion sociale en Afrique et dans la Diaspora africaine organisée à Sun City par le gouvernement et l'Université de l'Afrique du Sud, la célébration à Paris du Cinquantenaire du 1^{er} Congrès des artistes et écrivains noirs par la Communauté africaine de culture, la Conférence de la South African Broadcasting Corporation de Johannesburg sur l'adaptation à la télévision de la littérature orale africaine.

Si la diversité des situations, des opinions et des tendances est saluée comme un élément d'enrichissement, si le recours à un dialogue constructif entre partenaires est appelé de tous les vœux, et si l'intégration des jeunes dans leur milieu éducatif est adopté comme principe de formation, c'est en raison d'une recommandation qui est faite à tous d'observer, avec un esprit critique, l'évolution du monde et l'apparition de nouveaux impératifs qu'impose la nouvelle conjecture globale et technologique.

Oui au devoir de mémoire, mais dans l'ascèse d'une re-lecture attentive de l'histoire. Oui au droit à la réparation, mais pour une politique volontaire et contraignante de participer à l'écriture de l'Histoire. Oui à la reconnaissance des valeurs identitaires de civilisation, mais dans un effort de recherche, un élan de créativité et une décision claire de contribuer activement à l'émergence d'une nouvelle civilisation contemporaine.

Au "crépuscule des petits dieux" d'Alain Minc pourra surgir alors - non dans la rupture, mais dans une volonté assumée d'initiation et de transfert, - une nouvelle saison de génies en herbe et de jeunes talents, conscients et engagés, conférant du même coup sa légitimité à la quête de la renaissance africaine comme politique culturelle.

Editorial

There are coincidences, which, by the convergence of their issues, are heralding new perceptions and new orientations. The month of September 2006 has been particularly rich in this respect. Among the most resounding recent events, are the Conference of the African Union Ministers of Education and the launching in Maputo of the Second Decade of Education of the African Union, the international conference on cultural diversity and social cohesion in Africa and in the African diaspora organized in Sun City by the government of South Africa and the University of South Africa, the celebration in Paris, France of the fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of Black Artists and Writers (1956) by the African Community of Culture and the conference called in Johannesburg by the South African Broadcasting Corporation on the adaptation on television of the African oral literature.

If the diversity of the situations, opinions and trends is welcomed as an element of enrichment, if the call for a constructive dialogue between partners and the incorporation of the youth in their learning environment, is adopted as a principle, a recommendation is highly made to all to observe through a criticizing lens the evolution of the world and the emergence of new global and technological issues raised by today's world.

Yes to the duty of the memory, but in the asceticism of an attentive second reading of History. Yes to the right of reparation, but for a voluntary and constraining policy to take part in the writing of History. Yes to the recognition of civilization's identity values, but in an effort of research, a dash of creativity and a clear will to contribute actively to the emergence of a new contemporary civilization.

In the "twilight of the small gods "of Alain Minc will then be able to emerge, - not in the rupture, but in a will of continuity, initiation and transfer, - a new era and new generation of geniuses and young talents, aware and committed, at the same time conferring its legitimacy to the search of the African Renaissance as cultural policy.

Le plan de développement culturel du Ministère de la Culture pour l'exercice 2008/2012, est présenté vendredi, à Luanda, au III^{ème} Colloque sur la Culture Nationale, ayant suscité des sérieux débats sur sa matérialisation en Angola.

Le document présente généralement des propositions contenues dans cinq programmes qui établissent la ligne directrice sur les tâches qui se réaliseront pendant le quinquennal, exécutant ainsi des actions conçues dans différents domaines de la culture.

Le plan de développement culturel, qui sera exécuté à moyen terme, comprend 14 programmes et 23 sous-programmes, dont la mise en oeuvre implique l'engagement de plusieurs entités des secteurs tant publics que privés.

Quant au développement des Musées communautaires, le programme I précise que les musées doivent être conçus et adaptés à la réalité socio-politique, et leur mise en oeuvre devra être faite avec des ressources des institutions culturelles traditionnelles.

Pour ce qui est de l'introduction des langues nationales dans l'administration publique, le plan prévoit l'institutionnalisation de l'usage officiel des langues nationales, historiquement correspondantes à une certaine région, pour la concrétisation et fonction communicative des actes administratifs.

Le document aborde aussi d'autres aspects importants relatifs à d'autres domaines du secteur culturel, notamment la protection des mythes, des croyances, des jeux et des fêtes traditionnels et leur transmission aux futures générations.

La création littéraire, les arts visuels, le cinéma, les industries culturelles, la revalorisation de l'artisanat lié aux technologies traditionnelles, l'organisation des Foires d'artisanat et l'incitation de son introduction au marché, font également partie du plan de développement Culturel.

More than 500 delegates coming from the SADC region participated in the proceedings held at the University of Johannesburg. Politics, Gender issues, Banking, Identity, and the contribution of Muslims to Socio-economic development.

The tangible outcomes of the Symposium include: a continuation of the Symposia in southern Africa every three years - the next one being held in 2009; scholarships for students intending higher studies in Islamic Civilisation; academic and scholar networks; the publication of articles in journals; and the continuous promotion of the study of Islamic Civilisation in the region.

C.2 The Association of Southern African Professional Archaeologists (ASAPA)

In 1970 a group of professional archaeologists formed the Southern African Association of Archaeologists (SA3). The principal aim of this association was to encourage the training of archaeologists to provide the expertise necessary to manage cultural heritage, and promote public awareness of archaeological heritage.

Over the ensuing years the discipline of archaeology grew and became well established in many of southern Africa's Universities and museums. Over time the profile of Archaeology in southern Africa has changed and archaeologists now operate in many different sectors - from the public and educational sector through to trade and industry.

The association is undergoing a critical transition, moving from an informal body that promotes archaeology to a professional organization that will play an active role in regulating the standards and practice of archaeology in the SADC region. To reflect this transition the name of the organization has been changed to the Association of Southern African Professional Archaeologists (ASAPA) and it will be registered as an NGO - non-profit organisation. The aims of the new organization are to:

- protect and serve the interests of archaeologists operating within the research and contract resource management sector,
- develop and promote the research and management of archaeological resources,
- promote the exchange of archaeological information within southern Africa and abroad.

Named formerly as CEDRAB (The National Ahmed Baba Center for Documentation and Research in Timbuktu or "Centre de Documentation et de Recherches Ahmed Baba"), the Institute was created in 1970 through a UNESCO initiative and became operative in 1977 through financial support from Kuwait.

The role of the Center is to:

- (1) organize prospecting and collection in the field of historical documents in Arabic and African languages;
- (2) establish archives and catalogues of the collected documents;
- (3) assure the conservation of the manuscripts according to modern scientific norms;
- (4) disseminate through authentic documentation, African literature in Arabic;
- (5) develop an Arabo-Islamic culture in Timbuktu, being one of the great centers;
- (6) act as an institute charged with the exchange of information, research, and a node for cultural relations between Mali and the Arab world and all other countries interested in African civilizations and cultures.

The Center is currently under the auspices of the Ministry of Higher Education and has recently been given autonomous status. In the year 2000, the Malian Government passed a decree to convert CEDRAB to a full-fledged institute of higher learning, the Institute des Hautes Etudes et de la Recherche Islamique Ahmed Baba (IHERI-AB), creating a great need to train both existing and prospective research staff to undertake high-level research and training activities at the newly established institute.

C.4 Centre for Advanced Studies of African Society

The CASAS, established in 1997, has been conceived as a Pan-African centre for creating research networks in Africa and its Diaspora. CASAS's mission is to undertake fundamental research on African Society. The major area of current involvement of CASAS is the classification of African Languages on the basis of mutual intelligibility. This work is part of the CASAS Harmonization and Standardization of African Languages Project.

Its mission is to undertake through our network, fundamental research on African Society, which is published as part of our Book/Monograph/Occasional Paper and Notes & Records Series on themes and topics, which fit our mandate.

Cultural issues and their relationship to development, and selected basic research on the structure of African society are particularly important areas of interest to the centre. In this respect, CASAS carves out a niche, which is distinct from the areas of interest of other similar research bodies in Africa.

Study areas like archaeology, prehistory, anthropology and ethno-musicology are of interest.

C.5 The Africa's 100 Best Books of the 20th Century Project

The Africa's 100 Best Books of the 20th Century Project was an initiative of the Zimbabwe International Book Fair Association (ZIBFA) in consultation and cooperation with the African Publishers Network (APNET), the Pan African Booksellers Association (PABA) and the Pan African Writers Association (PAWA).

The idea was first mooted by Ali Mazrui during the ZIBF Indaba 1998 in Harare. The challenge to ZIBFA was to come up with a list of Africa's 100 Best Books of the 20th Century. This was a reaction to a list of 100 Great Books in English, published in the USA in 1998, in which no African Book in the English language made it into the first 100.

The aim of the Project was to direct the spotlight of the world onto the achievements of African writers and those who have published their works throughout the past century. It was also aimed to stimulate the future writing, publishing and publishing of African Literature.
